Ancestral legends tell of a clique of men who chose to become wolves. They wore the pelts of the creatures & performed rituals believing that they could harness the spirit of them. They believed that they truly became wolves, in every aspect except physical appearance. Later developments of this wisdom would be the berserkers of the Viking ages. These legends live on through (bastardized) folklore & any Germanic name with the suffix -wulf. This ritualistic practice produced countless tales. Among peers, it inspired stories of great glory & bravery. Among prey, it produced a feeling of absolute terror. Unconsciously, philosophical would remind us of this terror this terror with the phrase homo homini lupus est - man is a wolf to another man.

The descendants of these werewolves would go on to terrorize & bring to heel the entire world many times over. Even in the absence of proper rituals or whatnot under Christian occupation, the practice continued through the blood. The wolf is a common motif among military organizations to this day. Adolf Hitler's name derives from the earlier Germanic name Æthelwulf - 'noble wolf.'

In times of peace, Tacitus wrote that young Germanic warriors would join another tribe in battle. Not because of any kin obligations or ideological commitment, purely for the fight itself. Similar sentiments can be seen with the legendary Jomsviking, loyal only to themselves & yet the most distinguished warriors of their time. This indiscriminate valor is said to be rewarded greatly in the afterlife, whether it be in the Elysian Fields or Valhalla, where they will train for the Last Battle.

Ernst Jünger is a special character in history. All too many war memoirs are written by cowards, such as Hemmingway. The vast majority of the ones written by actual men are also quite simple, written by men with little ability to articulate spiritual or philosophical matters. Jünger was far from a coward, the level of his bravery was uncommon even among the officers of the Stürmtroopen. At the same time, he was very conscious of the less tangible aspects of existence & a skilled author. For this reason, Storm of Steel is the apogee of war memoirs. It alone gives a proper look at the intangible, transcendental nature of combat.

In line with the customs & spiritual traditions of my lineage, I too wish to live as wolves do. I desire the same clarity & lessons learned by Hitler & Jünger in the hellscapes of the Great War. I desire a crucible to turn my heart into steel, or to die trying. One of the last of a dying breed. I will leave it to Wyrd to decide whether or not I am killed, it makes little difference to me. Dead or alive, I will still be preparing for greater battles down the line. To many of you, this explanation may seem unnecessary. To others, you will simply never understand.

> "Beowulf, the champion of men against monsters, is almost inhuman himself. [Aglæca/æglæca] epitomises, in one word, the altogether exceptional nature of the dragon fight. Beowulf, the champion of good, the 'monster' amongst men, challenges the traditional incarnation of evil, the Dragon: æglæca meets æglæcan."

In the event I am killed, I will pass my publication to likeminded friends who will carry on the struggle. I have made many great friends during my time on this platform, I appreciate all of you & am grateful for the assistance you have provided in solidifying my worldview. A number of you have reached out to wish me luck & thank me for my writings in the past few days, I want you to know that this means the world to me. I never expected my publication to grow into one of the largest revolutionary NS sources on the clearnet, nor was a really happy about the responsibilities that came with. Regardless, I am happy that a number of fellow travelers have been positively impacted by my fairly pedestrian writing.

My final aphorism will simply reiterate what I've said for the past year. Our enemies are strong, whether it be the neo-bolsheviks to the East or our own occupied governments in the West. There is no imaginable scenario where dealing with these threats doesn't entail extreme violence & require men of steel. Men like the great Arminius & Vercingetorix. Either the true Aryans of mind, body & soul rise to the occasion or many millennia of human evolution will be for nothing. These ends justify absolutely any means.

For these friends, I offer you the most intimate gift a man can give - my Spotify playlist.

Further posts will be war diaries documenting my experiences, both internal & external.

Hail Victory, to the bitter end.
